Top Republican-Turnout Polling Locations

2024 General Election · ranked by Election District, aggregated per building · internal targeting — do not distribute

Each Delaware polling building is scored by summing 2024 Republican votes for President across every Election District (ED) it serves — most buildings host 2–4 EDs. President is the fullest-participation race, so it's the cleanest measure of where Republicans turn out. The per-ED sum reproduces the exact statewide R-President total (214,351). Use this to prioritize the 50 highest-Republican-turnout sites.

Method & caveats

R Pres. / R Sen. = 2024 general-election Republican votes for President and U.S. Senate, summed across the EDs each building serves (source: DE Dept. of Elections official per-ED tables). RD = the Representative District the building itself stands in, located by its coordinates against the state RD boundaries — not the district(s) it serves, which come from its EDs and can be several. A † marks a building sitting in an RD it does not serve: that is ordinary, since the DOE assigns an ED the nearest suitable building, which need not be inside that ED's own district. The boundary file is simplified, so a building within ~200 m of an RD line could be shown on the wrong side; none of the top 50 are that close. R Pri. = 2024 Republican primary ballots (Governor race) in those EDs — shown for reference only. The 2024 R primary drew ~13,200 votes statewide vs. 214,351 in the general, and its turnout clusters wherever a contested down-ballot R primary happened to be on the ballot (mostly the Cape/Lewes area), not where Republicans are most numerous — so rank by the general-election figures. ~99.97% of statewide R-President votes map to a located building; a handful of absentee/early-voting pseudo-districts don't tie to a physical site and are excluded.
